Nature's way is our way

Propagating in spring and summer (the natural propagating seasons) from vigorous virgin wood, growing under sun heat in summer and early fall (the natural growing seasons), each plant standing on its own roots (nature intends no surgical operation for a healthy plant), we produce vigorous and fresh rose plants for fall delivery.

Resting through the winter (the natural resting season except for root making) in cool houses regulated for roses exclusively, we produce sturdy plants with well-ripened wood, in prime condition to withstand long travel and out-door planting in early spring.

Trouble—

by reason of lost vitality as in case of rose wood propagated from cut-flower plants forced to exhaustion in seasons contrary to nature—none:

by reason of “suckers” and “shoots” springing up from wild brier root stock and killing the budded or grafted plant—none.

We have the location, the soil, the facilities, the experience.

We add care, competence, vigilance, method, truth, candor, courtesy, alacrity.
